Concentrations highlight

Educational Leadership

This concentration prepares you to become a transformative educator or school leader. It fosters personal and professional growth, empowering you to integrate your beliefs with professional effectiveness. The program cultivates leaders—school heads, organizational leaders, or teacher leaders—dedicated to creating positive school or organizational environments.

Grounded in a Christian framework and aligned with leadership standards, it blends leadership, organizational management, and educational knowledge. You will engage with contemporary theories and work on projects tailored to your learning needs, equipping you to make a meaningful impact in your educational community.

Curriculum and Instruction

This concentration focuses on mastering curriculum design within a Christian framework and higher educational standards, focusing on both what and how students learn. You will develop leadership in curriculum and pedagogy and integrate faith and values into your educational practice. Key areas include education, justice, equity, and excellence.

Guided by a Christian vision for shalom, you will analyze issues influencing curricular decisions, promoting equitable practices. Through research and theory, you will examine various curricular and pedagogical perspectives and learn to design and evaluate transformative classroom practices that create learning communities for all learners.

Inclusion Specialist

This concentration focuses on fostering an inclusive educational culture for diverse student success. You will learn to develop culturally responsive programs and collaborate with parents, teachers, and administrators to create effective plans for the school community and educational organization. The coursework explores inclusive teaching strategies while incorporating faith-based perspectives.

Guided by a Christ-centered vision, you will analyze historical, ethical, political, religious, and research literature on inclusive policies, equipping you to understand community perspectives. This will enhance your skills in program development, implementation, and evaluation, preparing you to advocate for all learners and strengthening your instructional leadership to lead initiatives promoting justice and inclusion in education.

Student spotlights

Ana

Class of 2023

“I learned the things I had not considered or thought about in my six years of teaching.”

Practical classroom culture

A Korean teaching social studies in an international school in Hong Kong, Ana joined the Master of Education program for its strength in cultivating practical habits for the classroom.

Each class has brought her eye-opening insights that she has been able to apply to her classroom, from inclusion to creativity in education.

“This M.Ed. program has been really stimulating academically as well as professionally.”

For Ana, the program has opened her eyes to ways of shaping classroom culture that are inclusive, creative, and practical.

Sindy

Class of 2023

“This program helped me understand that what we are doing is for the kingdom of God and the flourishing of human lives.”

Growing to be a Christ-Like person

Sindy, the CEO of the Basketball Sport Ministry, learned to focus not only on becoming a professional and meeting the world's status quo but also on pursuing personal growth to become more Christ-like and cultivating the Kingdom of God through her platform.

Following this program, she led her ministry to set a mission to help not only the skilled and talented basketball players but also many students with special educational needs (SEN).

“I think God is leading us and I think He is continuing leading the world.”

For Sindy, this program has helped her build a solid foundation of faith in her leadership within her ministry.

Program structure

Cohort learning

Throughout the duration of the program, students will study together with the same group (the cohort), going through the same courses together in the same sequence. This has the benefit of building a strong sense of community within the learning cohort.

Hybrid learning

Our model of hybrid learning combines face-to-face instruction with online learning. Each course in the program begins with several classes of cohort instruction and is supplemented by online learning, which offers greater flexibility on your time. This involves learning through a multimedia platform, discussions with peers and faculty, peer reviews of papers, and more.

Course highlight

Framing Questions, Global Forces, Constraining Structures

This course will examine key issues surrounding the nature of a good society, the ways in which the global community affects education, and how schooling gets structured by politics and economics. It will use the faith-based frames of justice and hope in connection with shalom and the kingdom of God to investigate formal education in light of its political, economic, social, and religious contexts. Students will investigate foundational questions around teaching, learning, curriculum, and language as well as structural issues of social class, gender, ability, and race.

WHY this M.Ed. Program?

Faith and learning

Learning with Calvin is marked by deep engagement with the world in light of the values of the Christian faith.

Global and local

You will learn from world-class faculty from Calvin, our partner university in the United States, along with experienced local faculty in Hong Kong, which will situate your learning in contemporary Hong Kong and Asian contexts for truly globalized perspectives.

Practice and theory

You are not just learning in a classroom. Through our curricula, you will have opportunities to live out an active faith through service, ministry, or community projects.

Personal development and faith-based community

With small class sizes and experienced faculty mentors, you will grow into fuller maturity alongside peers in a community committed to Christian values.

Faculty spotlight

Dr. Max Hui-Bon-Hoa

PhD, Languages in Education,
University of London, UK

"It's important to be creative in everything we do, because in that sense we are really imitating God."

Dr. Max Hui-Bon-Hoa has an extensive educational and teaching background in English, American literature, and education.

He was born and raised in Hong Kong, then went on to earn various qualifications in the U.S. (Stanford University for his bachelor's and three master's degrees, and Harvard University for a CAS degree). He also earned his PhD in the U.K.

Dr. Hui-Bon-Hoa finds that his M.Ed. students are curious, creative, and invested in strengthening their students' faith.
